Opening: Daido Moriyama at Luhring Augustine

Since the 1970s, Daido Moriyama has been photographing Japan and its shifting cultural values. Women in kimonos share the same streets as sex shops and lewd forms of entertainment, and various urbanites appear to be losing touch with the blossoming cherry trees around them. At this show, Moriyama will show new color photographs in that vein alongside recent erotic black-and-white photographs. In both cases, Moriyama's flair for clashing opposites—flesh and fabric, old and new—is on full display. (Though this show opened last week, Luhring Augustine will host its opening reception this week.)

Luhring Augustine, 25 Knickerbocker Avenue, Brooklyn, 6–8 p.m.
